Mr. Reid made the opening speech, and I am informed by gentlemen who heard him in other places in the district, that this effort was as good if not a little better than his previous efforts. He evidently showed that if his cause was a bad one he was too well skilled as a lawyer and a politician not to make the best of it. He complained that the press in the district was against him-that he was misrepresented by it, and if those of his fellow citizens who had never enjoyed the pleasure of seeing him would only he was either a wild beast or at least anything but a human being. He complained of various charges that had been made against him, such as that his love of office was greater than his love of country-that he was a spurious democrat-that he was a whigand last, but worst of all, that he was a know-nothing. In answer to the first, that he loved office, he stated that he had never been lucky enough to get one-that he desired (as every member of the bar Judges of our Superior Court, but that the President North Carolinian, in which he was charged with being a spurious democrat, in whom you had never placed any confidence—that you never had supported him, and that you never would; and stated that when you were nothing but a boy setting up type in the Carolinian office, that he was fighting the great battles of the democratic party in the county of Cumberland, which county he represented in the Legislatures of 1838, '40 and '42-that whether you sup-

STATE DEPARTMENT. Frenchman Murdered by a Moor at Tangier-Summary Trial and Execution of the Murderer-A Wreck-Capture of a French Vessel by Pirates,

Extract of a letter from a correspondent at Tangier,

Iorocco, dated April 25, 1855: "This afternoon, Mulay Sahib Elhalawy, a Moor om Algeria, murdered Paul Ray, a French subject, at the door of his (Ray's) shop, in the 'Little Sok,' market,) by ripping open his bowels with a knife. soldier, courier from Rabat, who had just arrived Tangier, witnessing the deed, attempted to arrest he murderer, and was slain, being shot through the heart with a pistol ball by Elhalawy. The latter then fled to the great mosque for sanctuary. The governor of the town being informed of the circumstance, sent his son and a party of soldiers, with orders to arrest or slay the culprit in the mosque. After considerable parley, Elhalawy agreed, if not arrested, to leave the sanctuary, and march himself to the castle prison. The terms were accepted, an the murderer was followed to the prison by the guard, and the gates closed upon him.
